If you're in New York between 15 and 28 May 2017, don't miss this show at UN Headquarters in which vintage photographs accompanied by texts combine in a stunning introduction to the beginnings of modern day conference interpreting.

You'll see photographs of early simultaneous equipment and the pioneers of our profession, some of whom later joined forces to found AIIC. You'll also learn that team work, preparation and coordination between users and interpreters were an essential component from the start.

But if you won't be in New York, scroll through this illustrated overview of the opening ceremony and lectures.
